

ASSESSMENT

I came to know Michael Lavo during the summer semester of the academic year 2004/'05. During that particular semester he attended my „English for Economists – Advanced Oral Skills“ course here at the Language Institute. During the semester students had to present solutions to particular case-studies, take part in debates and do presentations. This student completed all the given tasks to my complete satisfaction

Mr.Lavo is a hardworking conscientious student with an excellent command of the English language.He attended the course regularly and contributed most positively to the weekly sessions. His questioning and analysis of situations or topics were always extremely intelligent and he put forward his position eloquently and convincingly.

I always observe a student's ability to work in a team and in the area of team work Mr.Lavo achieves top marks. What is equally important is the fact that he was very popular with his fellow students. He has an extremely pleasant personality and it was a great pleasure working with this student as he obviously not only has a very good command of English but also understands and appreciates the mentality and culture behind the language. I consider this student to be reliable, dedicated and enthusiastic about his studies. He is obviously the kind of person who is determined to make the best of his time studying and I am sure that we can expect further very positive developments from this particular student.

Michael Lavo is among the top five percent of students I have taught at this university over the past fifteen years and I have no problem whatsoever in recommending him.

Signed: Séamus McClelland

Séamus McClelland Lecturer English as a Foreign Language/Foreign Language Institute University of Constance.